

When it comes to jewellery, the first thing that gets noticed are the gemstones and gold. With the help of my brightness, contrast and tones correction service, I can change gemstone & gold colours to enhance their beauty and give them an attractive appearance that draws attention from people who look at them. In addition, I can remove dust and poor reflections, as well as clear up the dust that sticks on gems so they are as good as new again. Here are some examples of my work in changing the colour of gems and removing dust & poor reflections from jewelries using Photoshop. Click here to see more examples on my website. What does Brightness/Contrast/Tone correction mean?

Digital photographs get stored as tiny computer files, which means that if you enlarge or reduce them too much (for instance to make them fit your website), they can start to look blurry. This is where my services can help. By using professional software to improve your photograph's brightness, contrast and tones, we can make it look better without losing any detail. It's like giving a boost of vitamins to an otherwise dull picture!

Why change the colours?

Although we have become accustomed to seeing gemstones in various colours over time, natural gemstones such as diamonds are typically colourless. When colour is added for artistic purposes it is referred to as a colour treatment. The most common gemstone treatments are heating and dyeing or irradiation. There are many reasons why someone would want their diamond to be enhanced with a different or modified colour. Many people choose heated stones because they can offer a broader range of colours than naturally occurring ones.

What if it goes wrong?

If a client's jewellery needs more work than first anticipated, or if you discover something unexpected (and damaging) during your work on it, explain how you would handle that situation. Always communicate clearly with your clients so they know exactly what they can expect from you—you don't want to disappoint a client!
