Unless you've got maid service, your place is full of dust, dirt, pet hair, and doughnut crumbs like the rest of us. Even if you employ a maid, they won't be around when you fumble popcorn into your couch on Netflix night. And if you have a robot vacuum for routine cleanings, they can't climb your couch or tables for dribbled cookie crumbs. This vacuum's resemblance to a hairdryer or a mic makes it a particularly suitable option for anyone partial to singing while they're cleaning. In all seriousness, this vacuum is a joy to use – a lightweight dust-busting mean machine, which doesn't have an overload of unnecessary parts or functions unlikely to see the light of day.

As a dog mom to two fur babies, Turley is a fan of this .2-gallon-capacity handheld vacuum for its two nozzles that are specifically designed to attract stray hairs. "It has a rubber nozzle, which can be removed when needed, which is great for picking up dog hair," she explained. "The rubber nozzle bends and contours around chairs, stairs and more to ensure that no stray hairs are left behind. However, she noted that it is corded with a 16-foot range, which can be a drawback.
