

Darksaint Opening Post Planning and Criticism

Nuclear Winter

Darksaint starts the battle saying he isn't using any sneak attacks or multi-layered plans. He's gonna do a simple AOE attack. And he then shows a scan of Winter channelling the energy of the Sun causing an area 800m on all side of him to be turned into black glass from the sheer force of the blast he emitted.

But there is also the potential for Winter to have in his own words,

"I could have cauterised the entire Planet!".

Darksaint then states that as he uses this attack he will also shrink himself down to the subatomic level and then in his small form he can also travel on the energy forms caused by the Sun into Leo.

He then provides scans that prove beyond doubt that Atom can travel along certain forms of energy.

Darksaint mentioned that Atom would specifically ride the Electro Magnetic waves into Leonidas.

And proves that exactly with a next set of scans showing Atom doing this.

Darksaint then says that his strategy now will be that once he is inside Leo's head he will once again channel the Sun and let off a non-holding back explosion inside his brain. And the dissipation from the neural storm wouldn't affect him since Winters energy absorbing capabilities play their part here. Darksaint also adds that if he is travelling on these waves. He will also be travelling at the speed of them. Which is light speed. And that Leo has no counter for these type of speeds. The final sentence of this section states that due to the first Sun explosion being set off that Leo's amalgam will be dazed and unable to react in time.

Counters

Darksaint begins this section by stating he is going to see if he can guess what Leo's plans are. And if he can possible counter them.

He starts off by saying that,

So, Nimrod is capable of shapeshifting, telekinesis, scanning, sonics, plasma bolts, and has control of his body on the molecular level, able to heal himself blah blah blah.

He continues to say that when his amalgam is in it's shrunken form that all these energy attacks won't mean a thing since he will be able to see them coming and doge them with ease. And says that the energy that is being directed at him, he will be able to redirect back into negative energy and throw it right back at him thanks to Winter being able to do such thing. He then shows a scan of Winter using this ability against Apollo to redirect Apollo's positive energy. Into so called negative energy.

Darksaint then shows 3 examples of Nimrod being easily damaged by Mutants that wouldn't be considered "strong". And states that the countermeasures Nimrod used against them wouldn't phase his amalgam at all.

Here is a point in which I thoroughly disagree with what Darksaint has said. Nimrod calculated the measures he did that were applicable for the power level of the people he was fighting. When he fights an enemy who provides more of a danger i.e Juggernaut, he will use more powerful countermeasures. So I thoroughly disagree with the argument made here. Nimrod's whole character is that he adapts precisely to what he needs to for a given situation. Not over adapts. This is the first big disagreement I have had with either poster as of yet.

Darksaint makes another point that I am not a fan of. As a judge (and person in general) I am absolutely not a fan of assumptions. He states that he argues that Nimrod can only access memory banks. Which is entirely unproven.

Summary

Darksaint very much does a Leo here and goes through all of the tactics that he will use to defeat Leonidas.

Match starts, I go boom, and use that as a cover to propel me at lightspeed into Leo. As a sensory amalgam, he NEEDS to be able to detect various energies. Any forcefield he throws up will be permeable to me. Once inside, I once more channel the Sun, directly into him, blowing him up from the inside.

Rinse, repeat as necessary. Over and over again. The only thing stopping Winter last time, was his own control so he didn't cauterise the Earth. Here, I will cut loose, and actually destroy the entire planet we are on.

A simple tactic this time. Massive AOE damage.

PS: I am posting this, as that noob Blair Wind was unable to. Please check over to see that I have not deviated from my PM, BW.