The Search Engine Optimization Seo Diaries

Breaks up draw. There's the entire "It's not you, it's me" dance, the regret, the angernot to mention the remorse about losing time, cash, and energy on something that, well, blew up in your face. I remember a customer that came to us last year with an SEO separation story. After 2 years of an entire lotta nothin, the service owner lastly tried to leave out of the relationship.

Their previous SEO company would not release any historical information, would not move ownership of their Facebook page, and even pulled their website since the customer didn't technically own it (yes, that's a thing). The issue was that she just didn't know what she was expected to be searching for. If you remain in the same boat, you remain in luck.

As my story above highlights, the benefits of employing an SEO company can be outweighed by the negatives. For those of you who are still on the fence about paying for a firm to manage your SEO, here is something to consider. When you hire an SEO business to improve your online existence, you ultimately get: Keep in mind that some firms can help you with more than just SEO.
