Not all profiles are created equally. Here are nine easy tips to make your dating profile stand out and shine to make this year your year of love.

I know we all know people who met online. I know we all know people who love to tell us that they know people who met online. Everybody meets online now, right? So what does that say for the pride of us still hunting, still endlessly searching, what are we? No one can tell us, but GirlsforDate can tell us about their best friend's sister who is so happy now. She's happy, so you'll be happy, too. Just keep trying. No matter what happens, no matter if nothing happens, just keep trying. For a decade. Or more.

You're out at the bar on a Friday night with your buddies when you happen to see an absolute stunner sitting across the way. After the initial shock and awe wears off, your next thought might be GirlsforDate, "They're perfect, but there's no way I can just walk up to them. What would I even say?"

With apps out there like Tinder, Bumble and eHarmony, meeting someone organically — that is, face-to-face without having had any prior interaction whatsoever — can seem more daunting than ever. On a GirlsforDate dating app, you have the luxury of scoping a potential partner out, as well as engaging in small talk that'll help get those introductory things out of the way. You're also able to gauge whether or not you actually want to take the time to meet this individual in-person.

Contrast that with meeting someone organically, not knowing a single thing about the person you're about to approach aside from their looks, and it's easy to see why the prospect might appear terrifying. Your mind starts thinking of all the ways it could potentially go wrong. The questions start, and despite trying, they never let up: Should I offer to buy them a drink? Is it best to start with a compliment? How do I make sure I don't come off as creepy? Why does life have to be so hard?
