Keep your cat occupied by making your personal dangly toys. Using soft cotton rope, cut a length of about two feet. Tie a knot at one end. Tie another knot around three inches from the opposite end. Unravel the rope below this knot. Attach the rope to the back of a kitchen chair for your cat to play.

Play together with your cat using proper cat toys. Cats love toys that help them feel like the predators that they think they are. Try sticking with toys that help them dance around or jump. This may also help them use extra energy by pouncing on toys rather than people's feet.

If your dog and cat are best friends, be sure to keep them separate after flea treatment. Your dog's flea products are very hazardous for cats. Cats which come in contact with dog flea products often die. Make sure you use only cat products on your cat and only dog products on your own dog.

Cats and electrical cords don't mix. If you notice your cat includes a habit of chewing on electric cords, make an effort to bundle them up and hide them out from the cat's reach. If that's not possible, spray a small amount of bitter apple onto the cords. Not merely is bitter apple non-toxic, cats absolutely hate the taste.

A cheap rubber welcome mat helps maintain cat food off your floor. That is also a great tool to keep your cat from tracking litter out of the box. Black rubber mats cost around three dollars at dollar stores. Put your cat food dish on one and your kitty litter box on another. Male cats often develop crystals in their bladder that come out within their urine. This is often prevented with a proper diet. Passing those crystals hurts and having this corrected by a vet is expensive. Make sure your cat's food is not high in magnesium. In the same way in the grocery store, take time to browse the labels. Fish-based foods usually contain much more magnesium than poultry-based foods.
