International Women's Day 2020

International Women's Day is at the very heart of Fashion Revolution. It is a moment to celebrate the women we represent and support in our campaign and to reflect on how much is still to be done in achieving gender equality. Almost anywhere that clothes are made, most of the work is done by women. So when we ask, #WhoMadeMyClothes?, the answer is most often women.

Anita Dongre

Anita Dongre, despite being raised in a typically traditional Indian family she never gave up on her dream of becoming what she is today. From her childhood, she was around the people who followed all the stereotypes society threw at them and expects them to fulfill. Anita's dream to launch her own brand attained just because of her willingness and determination to empower herself. In a family where no women ever worked anywhere, she stood for her dreams fearlessly. Nothing can be better than this to take inspiration for women's day empowerment.

Ritu Kumar

One of India's renowned Fashion Designer, Ritu Kumar has faced many hurdles and challenges throughout her journey of becoming what she always wanted to be. Started with just four hand block printers and two tables in a small village today she has her outlets in almost 14 cities of India. Awarded with the Indira Gandhi Priyadarshini Award and Padma Shri Award for her contribution in the field of fashion and her exceptional services in the field of craftsmanship #sheinspiresus with her dedication and keenness.

Masaba Gupta

This tribute of ours to the women who inspired us with their empowering stories is incomplete without featuring the struggles of designer Masaba Gupta. At this #IWD2020, inspire yourself to fight for human rights and let others know your worth. Designer Masaba Gupta also tackled many complexities but she never ever allowed the social stereotypes to come in her way. She also faced racism from her childhood but stood strong and fierce throughout her journey. She is an example of how a woman can change her own life if she is willing too. Her couture collection portrays her talent and skills purely and is enough to empower others.
