

After the snap, many families lost their loved ones. Everything is eerie and silent with half the population gone.

In space, there is Iron Man and Nebula are slowly running out of oxygen after floating around for 3 weeks with no way to get home. However, out of nowhere Captain Marvel appears and saves Iron and Nebula, safely transporting them back to earth via carrying the ship they were locked in.

Once back, the remaining Avengers at the HQ: Hulk, Captain America, Scarlet Witch, Thor, and Black Widow greet their lost comrades. They also want to quickly go back to devising a plan to find Thanos and use the infinity gauntlet to snap the ones turned into dust back into existence. Using Nebula, they successfully locate Thanos, but it is too late. Thanos has already destroyed the stones not only so that they cannot go back, but also to resist temptation to use the power of the infinity gauntlet again. Angered by this, Thor cuts off Thanos' head and kills him.

The Avengers return to the HQ and try to think of a new plan to return their loved ones back. They believe that there must be another way. However, Iron Man says he's out. Iron Man says that he has lost too much, and he's getting too old for this and wants to just settle down somewhere and live the rest of his life in peace. He leaves the Avengers.

5 years later, Ant Man, who was stuck in atomic level particles using shrinking technology inside a minivan finally escapes. He is lost and doesn't know that half the human population is gone. He quickly goes to find the Avengers and discovers what happened. After listening to the events that happened, Ant Man suggests a solution- time travel by shrinking people's atoms. He said that when he shrunk into an atom, he didn't even notice 5 years flew by-it was only 5 hours for him. In this same way, he believes that's how the people turned to dust have become. Thus using this concept the Avengers seek to create a time machine.

First off, they go to Iron Man with the idea as he's the smartest among them. At this time, Iron Man has a family and daughter and he says no because the idea is too risky and could risk what they all had left. Feeling depressed, the Avengers sought out the Hulk.

After the infinity wars, Hulk discovered that that rage inside him and his calm side was the same person and is now green without the craziness and anger (inner peace, so to say). When the Avengers come to him with this idea, he wasn't sure if he could do it but says he'll try. He goes back to Avengers' HQ and starts the time machine development.

Back at Iron Man's home, he ponders about the theory the Avengers tell him and tries it due to his curiosity. To his surprise, it works. Iron Man could now give this completed blueprint to the Avengers and take the risk of going back in time and changing everything, or take it to his grave. In the end, he decides to go to the Avengers'.

(Fast forward) The time machine is built and now it is time to go back in time to retrieve the infinity stones. The Avengers go to their full team to embark on this task (Thor is fat now btw). After assembling, the Avengers split into small teams so they can gather the stones more quickly. Going to the past, the Avengers meet their past selves but nothing major occurs and they all come back to the present time with the stones. However, one person is missing: Black Widow. In order to get the soul stone, someone must be sacrificed. The 2 Avengers who went for the soul stone were Hawkeye and Black Widow. They both try to sacrifice themselves for the other but in the end Black Widow won and sacrificed herself for Hawkeye.

It seems like nothing is going wrong for them, but unfortunately, Thanos in the past catches wind of their plans. He uses the time machine the Avengers built to travel to present time. At this time, Hulk dons the new infinity gauntlet with the infinity stones (he's the only one who can don it because it was said in previous movies that only someone with great power can use the stone and survive) and snaps his finger to return everyone who had become dust 5 years ago back. Right after snapping, the Avengers' HQ is blasted by Thanos and his invading troops from the past.

The Avengers, caught by surprise, is weakened but still desperately try to fight back. However, this Thanos that came from the past was during his prime, making him way stronger than the Thanos they fought in the infinity wars. All the Avengers slowly get beaten up, and then Thanos, confident in his victory, mock them. Thanos then tries to put them into deeper despair by showing the Avengers all the armies he has yet to transport to the present world (aka meaning the Avengers only fought him and even if they defeated him, he still had a whole army he had left) Unfazed, Captain America stands up to this incoming army with his broken shield, willing to fight on.

Suddenly, magic circles start appearing. Magic circles like the ones Dr. Strange makes. Then, armies of Avengers and their armies come pouring out- these were the people that were returned when Hulk snapped his fingers with the infinity gauntlet to undo the dusting. The final battle begins and ends when Iron Man manages to get the gauntlet, wear it, and snap his fingers. In this way, Thanos and his army turns to dust. However, because Iron Man is a mortal, using the gauntlet's powers causes him to die.

After the battle, a memorial is held for Iron Man and Captain America is tasked with returning the infinity stones back to the timelines the Avengers stole them as to not disrupt their pasts' future. After returning, Captain America has become an old man and it is revealed that he spent his lifetime with his wife that was killed in the past. Captain America passes on his legacy to Captain Africa America.
