Your banker, CPA or Financial Advisor were likely to be very helpful in getting your PPP funds. They were signing you up to an SBA-guaranteed loans. Based on their PPP loans, the SBA paid administrative fees to banks. They were therefore incented to help you learn about the program and make sure all paperwork was in order.

Compared to the ERTC, the PPP program was also a rather simple calculation. 2 1/2 times your average monthly payroll including health insurance and state unemployment taxes.

ERTC redits do not allow for deferral. These credits are dollar-for-dollar credits that you have received for wages paid. These are not taxes that you have paid, but actual wages.

These credits can be used to offset future tax payments or you can get a refund check. It's up to you.

And you will NOT have to re-pay these funds (unless, of course, you don't provide adequate documentation in the course of an audit).
