Nutrition

Nutrition is the study of how food nourishes the body

Nutrients are the building blocks, which cells of the body depend on in order to

1. Micronutrients: supply body with energy

Ex: Carbohydrates, fats and proteins

2. Micronutrients: help manufactured, repair and maintain cells

Ex: minerals and vitamins

Body relies on a constant supply of energy: from food, calories

Basal Metabolism (bare minimum)

Energy required to carry on the involuntary activities of the body temperature, heart rate, blood pressure, bone tone, heartbeat and respirations

- Temperature increase BMR

- Temperature increase by 7% (BMR) (for each % rise in temp)

- Environmental temperature, increase BMR to generate body heat

* Lean body mass has increased metabolic activity than fat/none

Carbohydrates (primary energy source)

Simple

- Sugars = monosaccharides and disaccharides

Complex

- Sugars = polysaccharides

- Function:

• Energy Supply: muscle and brain (stored in liver as glycogen and muscle)

• Spare Protein: if glycogen is low, protein will be broken down. If this happens, proteins will not be available for growth and tissue repair. Produces ketones, which can cause an acid-base imbalance.

- Happens when a one is a newly diagnosed diabetic with high blood sugar

• Psychological function: increase insulin secretion, which leads to the absorption of sodium and excretion of calcium
