Minecraft maker Mojang plans spin-off game

18 December 2014

Minecraft maker Mojang is planning a spin-off game based on its hugely popular block-building title.

It is called Minecraft: Story Mode and will be an episodic video game that takes place in the familiar Minecraft world, but introduces new characters to the setting.

Telltale Games is producing the game. They have also produced other episodic titles.

The first episode is scheduled to be released on consoles and Android devices, as well Macs and PCs.

It is unknown what the experience will be like. Mega blog Mojang has created a brief browser-based game called InfoQuest II to show what it might look like.

In a blogpost, Mojang said the game would be developed with the help of the Minecraft community.

It was intended to reassure players that Story Mode will not be violent and bloody as the previous Telltale games. Telltale has released Tales from the Borderlands, The Wolf Among Us, Tales from the Borderlands, and other titles based off Game of Thrones as well as the zombie thriller The Walking Dead.

"Telltale's Minecraft-like game will feel similar to Minecraft," stated Mojang, "but it's an entirely original take inspired by our game."

Mojang just released a finished version its Scrolls card-based magic combat game. This news about Story Mode came shortly after.
