A healthy adult human has between 4,500 and 11,000 white blood cells per cubic millimetre of blood. Fluctuations in white cell number occur during the day; lower values are obtained during rest and higher values during exercise. An abnormal increase in white cell number is known as leukocytosis, whereas an abnormal decrease in number is known as leukopenia. White cell count may increase in response to intense physical exertion, convulsions, acute emotional reactions, pain, pregnancy, labour, and certain disease states, such as infections and intoxications. Don't:

Use the “I Like Helping Others” cliché. This is a good start, but you should quite get to the heart of “why?” This line of thinking might be fine at a party or with your family, but let us think through it more carefully. The process is limited primarily because of two reasons: it is too general and it is not looking.

Do:

Focus on patients and what drives you to care for them. Think of a child—a broken bone or a bad case of tonsillitis, perhaps—that has spent many days or weeks in the hospital.

What did the doctors do that stood out to you? Why do you remember them in your mind even now? How did they affect you as a patient? What about the technicians? In considering these answers, we can understand the question is essential: what is the impact you want to make on your patients?
